Finding Food Resources

Harvesters Community Food Network has an interactive map that lists all of its partner pantries and kitchens. Hours and phone numbers for all listed affiliates are available on the website as well. Harvesters suggests you call a pantry before arriving as hours might be limited due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Harvesters can also help individuals to apply for food assistance programs and determine eligibility.

Nourish KC serves a hot, nutritious lunch every weekday, no questions asked, at its Kansas City Community Kitchen (750 Paseo Blvd.) from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m.

Little Free Pantry has locations across the metro area. These pantries are open to everyone to drop off or pick up needed materials.

Food Not Bombs is a national organization that serves free vegan meals. The Kansas City branch has a hot meal every Sunday from 4-5 p.m. at the corner of Independence Avenue and Monroe Avenue. It also offers free produce, bread, clothes and other necessities at the same time. Find a Food Not Bombs location near you.

Food Equality Initiative offers direct-to-door food assistance for those with food allergies who meet designated income levels.

Community Assistance Council offers by-appointment assistance throughout the week. Folks can receive boxes with food, hygiene products or diapers by making an appointment.

The lbotta app gives cash back on certain grocery items. This means SNAP (Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program) recipients can buy food with their SNAP cards, and with the money they get back through the app, buy necessary non-food items.

Benefits.gov is a great place for folks to find out about additional assistance programs.
